

The FCC should not preempt the State of Indiana's Telephone Privacy Law. As a full-time student who also works an average of 35 hours a week, I find soliciting phone calls to be very disruptive and annoying. My evenings are spent studying and these soliciting phone calls prevent this. Currently, under Indiana's laws I only receive 1 or 2 calls a week on average. Before the law was enacted, I was receiving at least 10 if not more a day. If the FCC law is enacted, the extent of the coverage will not be as good as what I'm currently receiving through the Indiana's laws. This will increase the number of calls and will be very disruptive to my studies. Thank you.
